STORAGE AND SPACE: EVERYONE NEEDS MORE

Baby boomers agree: Downsizing brings financial gains but new problems arise with space restrictions.

No one enjoys clutter. If you're like most people today, organizing your space is crucial to the success of your household and family. Downsizing to smaller living quarters enables the "boomer" generation the luxury of a turn-key operation, however, space is a premium and must be used to its full capacity.

In condos and small houses, second or third bedrooms often take on multiple roles including dens, offices, craft rooms, sewing rooms, playrooms, or exercise rooms. Without organization, clutter is sure to arise. Incorporating a spare bed only adds to the dilemma. To overcome the clutter issue, people choose to live without the additional amenities and reserve a spare bed for the spare room. In most circumstances, the bed takes up 90% of the space but is only used 5% of the time. Fortunately, there are a variety of solutions which make a small room bigger.

Overcoming the "space" issue takes forethought and ingenuity. A spare bed normally occupies 30 square feet of floor space. Tucking the bed away in a Murphy wall-bed cabinet allows for better usage of the remainder of the room. The 16" depth cabinet holds a regular coil mattress and the counter-balanced mechanism is lightweight enabling anyone from the budding age of 6 to the respectful age of 86 to lift the bed with ease.

Smaller spaces demand new solutions, storage solutions. Murphy Wall Beds has been creating storage since 1975 using innovative technology and creative cabinetry. A well executed storage system can transcend form and function into architecture for the art of living better, giving you more room in your life for the things that matter most.
